Excerpt: . . . - 7 sonal Business and Communication, and Recreation Figure 1-2. -Structure of the Analysis and Leisure has increased (see figure l-l). The amenity ultimately enjoyed by each individ-ual or household is achieved through a complex ser-ies of steps, each of which adds value of some kind. The value may be contributed by investments of household time, or maybe added by a business that contributes to a purchased product or service. The 1 final value of a purchased frozen pizza, for exam-ple, includes value contributed by farmers, packers, truckers, wholesalers, grocery stores, and the col-lection of legal, financial, insurance, and other firms that facilitate transactions needed by the complex network of activities. The methods this analysis uses to keep track of the flow of value in economy are summarized in fig-ure 1-2, which illustrates four basic steps in the net-work connecting people as consumers to people as employees and investors: 1. These recipes describe Consumption Recipes. the way households achieve each amenity by combining time invested by household mem-bers, purchased goods, purchased services, and goods and services purchased by the govern-ment. (The mix of private and public spending in 1985 is summarized in figure 1-3.)
