The progress made of buildings, etc., in the towns on the Great Southern Railway--Beverley, Kokeby, Brookton, and Pingelly--is an indication of the advance in settlement, being a reflection of the prosperity enjoyed in the country. In Beverley, an old-established town, two new stores have been built and opened, the hotels rebuilt and enlarged, new building for the Bank of Western Australia, and enlargement of State school; also several private houses have been built on the suburban lots by people having businesses in Beverley, who go in for a little gardening and fruit cultivation in their leisure hours. At Kokeby, a store, school, and blacksmith's shop have been established, and several of the town blocks have been sold. Fruit trees do remarkably well in this townsite. At Brookton the progress has been most marked; a State school, church, good store, with post office, excellent hotel, and blacksmith's shop, have been recently built, also a few private houses. The land of the townsite is of first class quality, well suited for growing vegetables, fruit, or viticulture. A much respected lady has demonstrated the fact that a fair living is to be made on a small area at Brookton; having secured 11 acres of suburban land, she has converted them into a model farm, divided into little paddocks, and is able to keep pigs, poultry, and cows, to grow sufficient hay for home use, in addition to vegetables and fruit. She...
