Not illustrated. 1910 Excerpt: . . . which, when values are substituted from above relations for  $M$ , etc. , there results In this equation, if we now make  $Q$  equal to zero, we have the same result as in eq. (78); while if  $P$  be made equal to zero we have the deflection (upward; note the negative sign) of the point  $D$  as due to the single load  $Q$  at  $C$  (in which case, of course, the extremity  $O$  must be latched down, and the reaction  $V$  is downward). It should be carefully noted that in the above solution  $P$  and  $Q$  are independent loads; that is, when  $P$  is conceived to vary  $Q$  remains constant; in other words,  $Q$  is not a function of  $P$  and hence (as above)  $d(Qx)dP = 0$ . But the reactions,  $V$  and  $V$ , depend on both  $P$  and  $Q$ ; and neither  $V$  nor  $V$  can be considered constant if either  $P$  or  $Q$  is to vary, but must be expressed in terms of the variable ( $P$ ; above) before  $dM dP$  can be obtained (on  $OD$  or  $DB$  We note also that the external work done by these two reactions, when the loads  $P$  and  $Q$  are gradually applied, is zero; since the supports have smooth horizontal surfaces and the points of the beam in contact with them are thus free to slide (one or both) during the loading; thus justifying us in the application of eq. (25), or (19). See note following eq. (19). In case the vertical deflection...
