I tell not thy many productions, I know that a thousand at least Of various plants here are rampant To grace a botanical feast: From various climes they have wandered, And found a sure footing with thee, Who ever a warm hand and welcome Hast tendered with love true and free. I know that thy woods are invested With music on pinions so rich, That the eye cannot weary of watching For those that our glances bewitch: Nor the ear be fatigued with the phrases All woven of notes clear and soft, That, uttered amid the dark branches, Are calling our spirits aloft. I know that thy waters are crowded With loveliest life that can move, Amid growths of a flowering sea-bed That Heavens best handiworks prove. No wonder that Moore at his leisure, From work that the Admiral gave, Was found neath a Calabash dreaming, And writing of cavern and wave. And now I have taken thy picture, --With pencil obscure I have traced, By means of the song that thou gavst me, An outline with loyalty graced. Farewell, for we neer more behold thee; We speed toward the age of the weak, But thy memory glowing at sunset Shall gild the last vanishing streak. And those who in kindness have striven To aid us thy glories to know, Who welcomed us first to the Island With truest and heartiest glow, Must evermore share the reflection That memorys...
