Excerpt: .younger students use increased more the longer their exposure to the program, suggesting that early risk can be reduced with early access to services. Finally, increased and prompt clinic attendance and increased use of contraception appear to have had a significant impact on pregnancy. While conceptions increased dramatically in the control group schools during this period (from 32 to 51 percent), in the program schools, conceptions dropped by 26 percent (Zabinetal, 1986). The Self Center model differs somewhat from the typical school-based clinic. Nevertheless, if these results can be replicated in other settings, they give solid support to the school-based clinic movement. This program suggests that the provision of free proximate contraceptive services that are linked to a strong education component may accelerate contraceptive behavior among sexually active teenagers without encouraging sexual intercourse among those who are not personally ready for such involvement.
