All is grist that comes to their mills for this reason, the advertiser minus the knowledge should consult the man with the knowledge. 2nd. Poor mediums. It is to be regretted that poor mediums are suffered to exist, and still they do exist in hundreds and thousands--poor mediums in every sense of the word, poor quantity of circulation, poor quality of circulation, poor literary and news matter, poor management and poor results. A good way to discover a poor medium is to advertise in the suspected publication. The knowledge is costly but valuable. Consulting with the man who knows is a better plan and costs less. 3rd. Poor copy. This subject is too broad for discussion here. Poor copy has as many legs as a centipede, any number of which may be cut off still allowing the creature to exist. Poor copy...
